

Coalition for Sepsis Survival

Sepsis is a medical condition that kills 280,000 people in the United States annually. It is the third leading cause of death behind all forms of cancer and heart disease. Yet, less than half of the US public has ever heard the word, sepsis.

We are going to change that.

The Coalition for Sepsis Survival (C4SS) has been formed as a facilitating body to encourage early recognition and effective treatment of sepsis and to decrease mortality rates through partnerships focused on public awareness, research, and financial support to hospitals. The Coalition is building a network of resources utilizing the most effective tools in order to achieve best-demonstrated practices in the management of sepsis.

“Coalition” and “Survival” were purposefully selected to represent the core values of our vision and mission.

Coalition underscores our philosophy to bring together hospitals, healthcare organizations, businesses, government, and the public into a coordinated partnership that is committed to reducing the mortality and morbidity of sepsis to achieve the best outcomes and value for patient care.

Survival represents our commitment to hospitals and clinicians to provide access to the tools and financial support in order to increase a patient’s chance for survival and the best quality of life.

Vision Statement

To build and support a healthcare community where any sepsis patient has a 90% chance of survival, without residual disabilities.

Mission Statement

The mission of the Coalition for Sepsis Survival is to significantly impact sepsis mortality and morbidity by leading state initiatives to build sepsis awareness and best practice treatments. Our initiatives will bring together in partnership, local communities, healthcare providers, hospitals, medical associations, healthcare insurance providers, leading businesses, and private donors with the shared objective to decrease sepsis mortality and morbidity.
